This Chapter, which has been included for the purposes of information and historical record, does not constitute a formal part of the Town of Richmond Hill Municipal Code.

Early in this century William Ashford Wright was asked by the Council of Richmond Hill to design a crest to be used on its stationery and for Town identification signs. The coat-of-arms from the House of Richmond was chosen because according to historians, the 4th Duke of Richmond, Charles Gordon Lennox, visited this Village in 1819 when he was Governor-General of Canada. It's reported that he so impressed the people of the Village that they re-christened it and accordingly bestowed upon it the name of Richmond Hill.

The motto, "En la rose je fleuris" is also from the Duke of Richmond's coat-of-arms. It is very appropriate for our Town because during the 19th century and the early part of this century Richmond Hill was the largest supplier of roses in Canada.

It was 1961 when the Council of the Town of Richmond Hill contacted the House of Richmond and received permission to formally adopt the slightly altered version of its coat-of-arms.

262.1.4 Roses - representation

The red rose represents Richmond Hill since during the 19th Century and early part of the 20th Century, Richmond Hill was the largest supplier of roses in Canada. When Queen Elizabeth and Prince Philip were married, the Queen's (Princess then) bouquet of roses came directly from Mills Roses, Richmond Hill. England (yellow) and York (white) roses represent the Region of York (formerly the County of York).
